HONOR TEST IS BIG SUCCESS AT HOUSE OF CORRECTION

Prisoners Get Outing and None Tries to Escape—Girls Are Practicing for Their First Baseball Game

Baseball? Why, certainly, girls know how to play it.

And if there is any special term you do not understand, any twist of the wrist that has ever been a mystery, visit the girls' team at the House of Correction and you'll see how it's done.

Chief John Meclary, who is in charge, has supplied bats and balls for the girls and they practice with them diligently. A portion of the field has been set aside for the inmates' games.

The girls will soon come out professionally and, as one of them said, "they can hardly wait." In the supply room are blouses and loose blouses, which will be the uniforms of the team.

The men have their team and last Friday they played their first game. "For the first time in the history of the institution," explained the chief, "all of the inmates were out at once. It has never been tried before, and some people were inclined to be a bit dubious about the results. There is no wall here to confine them, and they could have slipped away, I suppose, but too many things were against it.

Are Put Upon Honor "To begin with, I gave them a little talk explaining that they were out on their honor, and that if in the future they wanted the same privileges it depended entirely upon themselves.

"And say, I wish you could have seen them. The two teams were picked from separate wings, 'B' and 'G' and the other men were lined up along under the trees, where it was cool and the sun would not melt them. The girls were brought out in the yard, where they could see the game, too.

"I threw the first ball, and the game was on. And such laughing and good times they did have. It has been many a day since I have enjoyed myself so much."

Mr. Meclary, the "Chief," as they all call him, is a man of medium height, brown hair which is beginning to gray, and has kindly blue eyes, which twinkled as he told of the baseball game.

"Why, that will give them some-paying the price behind the sinner steel bars.

Ordinarily the inmates are locked in for the day at 5:30 o'clock, but daylight saving gives them two golden hours which they may spend outdoors in the well-kept, really beautiful grounds about the building. They sit under the big friendly trees, the breezes blowing through their hair and ruffling it about their faces.

The girls may sew or read, or even "just think," and the men read and smoke, or discuss the many problems of the day which always arise when a crowd of men get together. Saturday afternoon they are allowed to sit about in the same way, and also Sunday.

All are devoted to the "Chief." When he spoke to them before the ball game, putting each and every one on his or her honor, some of the inmates came to him and in their inadequate way tried to voice their appreciation. They also promised that no one would do anything to get the "Chief in wrong."
